DISPLACED WRIGLEY FIELD BLEACHER SEASON-TICKET HOLDERS COMPLAIN, ADJUST

BLEACHER BLUES

Chicago Tribune

With opening day on the horizon and the Wrigley Field bleachers resembling an erector set, some denizens of the most famous fan section in sports are wondering if life would ever be the same.

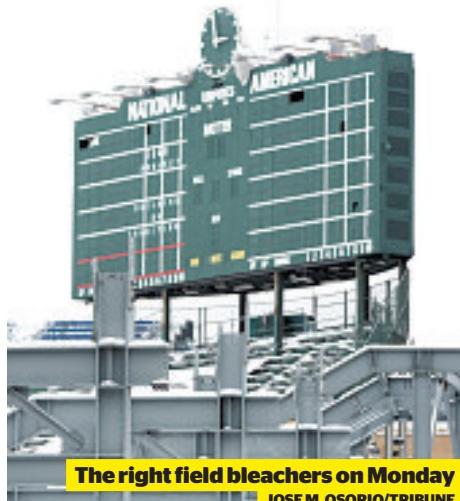

The bleacher season-ticket holders are temporarily without a home, and some blame the Cubs for catering to a younger crowd that drinks more and pays more attention to their smartphones than the game itself.

"It's all about the party," veteran bleacherite Linda Eisenberg said.

The Wrigley bleachers have been gutted this offseason to add lucrative patio sections, two jumbo-sized video boards and signage as part of the Ricketts family's $575 million renovation plan known as the "1060 Project."

Team management misjudged the effects of a harsh Chicago winter on the construction timeline, ensuring the bleachers would not be ready for the start of the season, which begins April 5 against the Cardinals.

The Cubs insist the left field bleachers will be ready by May 11, with the right field bleachers slated to open sometime in June. Bleacher season-ticket holders were offered refunds or down payments on next year's tickets, or relocation to seats in the "bowl" area, which some found lacking.

"The seats that were available weren't that good—either upper deck or back of terrace," bleacher season-ticket holder Donna Wakefield said. "Not good."

So what to do?

Wakefield, who is part of a group that calls themselves "Bleacher Refugees" and have had buttons and T-shirts made with the moniker, took the money. Tim Shockley, another bleacher-season ticket holder, said most of the bleacherites he knows also opted for refunds, figuring the early season games are played in miserable weather anyway.

"If it was in the middle of summer, I'd really be [ticked]," he said. "There are more night games affected than day games, and we're not big fans of night games—it's a different crowd."

After getting her $440 refund for 15 games, Eisenberg, a right-field regular, will miss her first Cubs opener in so long she can't remember the last time it happened.

"This totally [ticks] me off, and I'm not drinking the Kool-Aid that this is the year," she said. "If you have to fix the ballpark, why are you starting in the bleachers? The bleachers were redone 10 years ago, and now they're re-doing them again?"

Season-ticket holder Rich Skinner also opted for the refund, and wished the Cubs had done more to appease the refugees.

"Some benefits or some type of incentives would've been great," he said. "We have not seen that yet. ... Now there are all these rumors floating around that they won't be open until even later, and they haven't really communicated that information back to us. At this point, I don't know if I'll be watching any games in the bleachers this year."

DIFFERENT ERA, SAME ARGUMENT

Things change, but woeful Cubs fans don't. Here's a look at the many "end of the bleachers" moments at Wrigley Field in the past.

- » In the 1980s, fans upset about the idea of Tribune Co. adding lights wore bright yellow "No Lights in Wrigley!" T-shirts with a depiction of the Wrigley marquee.
- » In 1985, the Cubs announced they'd sell the $3.50 tickets in advance for the first time.
- » Later during the 1985 season, the team added a no-alcohol "family section" near the left foul pole.
- » On Opening Day in 1988, the Cubs banned beer vendors from roaming the "cheap" seats.
- » Last rites for the bleachers were held again in 2006 after a $13.5 million renovation project added 1,790 seats, and again in 2012 when the Cubs added an exclusive patio section and LED board in far right field.

Will the influx of patio dwellers change the bleacher atmosphere for good?

Shockley agrees the "patio-ites" are overwhelming the bleacherites and spend much of the game "looking at Waveland or Kenmore, the opposite direction of what's going on." But he said he's "realistic" about the changes and everyone will get used to the changes.

"At first, everyone was freaking out and screaming bloody murder—'This is outrageous, it should be like it was in the '60s,'" Shockley said. "I'm like 'No, we [stunk] most of the '60s.' A lot of people don't want to move on and upgrade [Wrigley]. But hey, you need revenue to make investments [in the team], and you need more seats for new revenue."

"As far as I'm concerned, they have good baseball management now and we just have to change with the times. It's like a mom-and-pop store going national. It's up to you whether to still buy the product or just stay home and pout."

What features should the Ventra app have?

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

✉ @tracyswartz

If only it could save you a seat on the train.

A forthcoming Ventra app, which would let public transit riders use their smartphones to buy fares for the CTA, Metra and the Pace suburban bus system, may not seem revolutionary to CTA riders—at least initially.

Many of the CTA features slated to be offered in the early version of the Ventra smartphone app, including adding money to a Ventra card and checking card balances, already are available at ventrachicago.com and at rail vending machines.

Transit officials plan to make the Ventra app, which can be used on Android devices and iPhones, available to the public for download in May and roll out additional features in increments after that. The most innovative function likely will come in early 2016, when CTA riders should be able to tap their phones, instead of their Ventra cards, on bus and rail readers to gain entry, said Tony Coppoletta, CTA manager of external electronic communications.

Chicago app expert Derek Eder said the transit agencies could think bigger in their design of the Ventra app to include how to connect to other modes of transportation, including Divvy shared bikes and Amtrak. The Ventra app will include a trip planner for CTA, Metra and Pace, Coppoletta said.

"It would be nice if there was a one-stop shop for everything," said Eder, partner and founder at DataMade, a Chicago-based civic technology company.

Eder said the Ventra app also could include maps of stations to display where riders can enter and exit. For now, the CTA isn't planning to add such a feature, transit officials said last week, after giving reporters a sneak preview of the app.

Metra riders likely will benefit the most from the initial rollout of the app because they would be able to purchase tickets to show Metra conductors on their phones instead of waiting in line at a vending machine to buy tickets.

CTA riders who occasionally ride Metra also would be able to use the app to pay for Metra tickets with money already stored on their Ventra cards, an option currently not available at Metra stations.

TESTERS NEEDED

For now, CTA, Metra and Pace officials are looking for 100 volunteers to test the app next month. Riders can sign up at transitchicago.com until April 3 to be considered for the test, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said.

The CTA did not offer this type of testing opportunity to the public before the agency's disastrous transition to Ventra in 2013.

As the agencies ready for public testing, RedEye has created a wish list—both realistic and far-fetched—of functions we'd like to see for the Ventra app.

CUSTOMER SERVICE RANTS

Lost your Ventra card? Have a balance discrepancy? Riders may find it helpful to use the app to contact customer service without having to make a phone call or wait in line at the Ventra office at 165 N. Jefferson St., on the Near West Side. Coppoletta said there are no plans to add a customer service feature to the app.

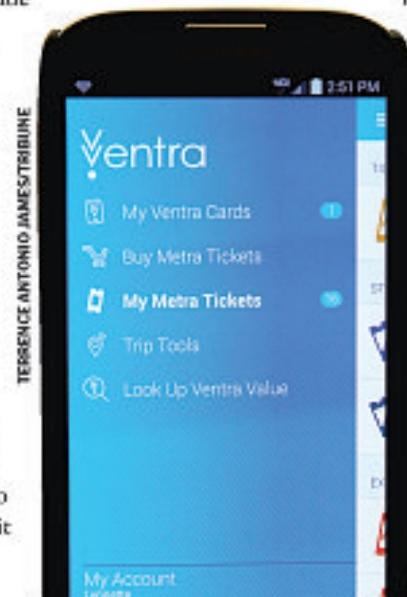

STATION HACKS

Coppoletta said he hopes visitors to Chicago, as well as regular CTA riders, use the app. But the CTA may be overwhelming to newbies.

Hacks that tell riders which bus stops have shelters to shield them from the elements and which rail stations are near major Chicago landmarks could be beneficial. The app will have trip planning tools, Coppoletta said, but they look similar to the CTA's current bus and train tracking system.

SMELLS ON THE 'L'

A community feature on the Ventra app could let riders alert others riders to avoid certain rail stations because of puddles or rail cars if someone has pooped on a train. Forget train tracker. A stain tracker may be more helpful.

Treasurer's collectibles auction raises $92,653

Chicago Tribune

The Illinois treasurer's office took in almost $92,653 in an auction of lost items last week, 53 percent more than the expected amount of $60,425.

The online auction drew 545 new bidders compared with previous sales, according to Greg Rivara, spokesman for the treasurer's office.

The top item out of the 16,200 commemorative coins, jewelry, baseball cards and comic books auctioned March 16-20 was an 1894 Morgan silver dollar, which sold for $4,550.

Other high-rolling lots included one with a $50 liberty eagle 1-ounce gold piece, which sold for $2,775, and one with a Rookwood Pottery vase that went for $1,075.

A lot with a Chicago Cubs 1965 Ernie Banks baseball card and a Chicago White Sox Frank Thomas signed rookie card sold for $685.

Historically, some of the items that have brought the highest bids were 383 Roosevelt dimes that went for $10,520 in 2012 and five 1947 Mexican pesos that went for $10,050 in 2013.

An 1894 Morgan silver dollar sold for $4,550 at the Illinois treasurer's online auction.

The items are appraised by an outside vendor and grouped together to increase interest, according to the treasurer's office. The money raised at auction is set aside in case someone wants to collect it, Rivara said, and the interest is used to pay bills for the state.

All of the items that were auctioned had been untouched for at least 10 years—five years in a bank's dormant account and five years at the treasurer's office, according to Treasurer Michael Frerichs.

The office continues to encourage Illinois residents to look up lost items by clicking on the I-Cash button at illinoistreasurer.gov, Rivara said. The office holds more than $2.1 billion in unclaimed cash and property, which includes unclaimed safe deposit box items, lost payroll checks and lost bank accounts.

"Items are added each year," Rivara said. "We are encouraging individuals to make sure to check one to two times a year at minimum."

Record number of ballots on 1st day of runoff early voting

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Despite Monday's snow flurries in Chicago, thousands of voters took time to cast ballots on the first day of early voting for the April 7 runoff election.

As of 5:15 p.m. Monday, 7,915 ballots were cast, according to an unofficial total provided by the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners. That beats the previous record for ballots cast on the first day of early voting in a Chicago municipal election, which was 6,133 ballots ahead of the 2011 city election, according to the city's election data.

"We're very pleased. It's a good indicator of how early voting is going to go for rest of the way," spokesman Jim Allen said, adding that a good start doesn't mean the runoff election will have a higher voter turnout.

The runoff election pits Mayor Emanuel against Cook County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia. There are 18 wards with aldermanic races.

Early voting continues through April 4.

Police: No evidence of gang-rape at UVA

1 A five-month police investigation into an alleged gang rape at the University of Virginia that Rolling Stone magazine described in graphic detail produced no evidence of the attack and was stymied by the accuser's unwillingness to cooperate, authorities said Monday.

The article, titled "A rape on campus," focused on a student identified only as "Jackie" who said she was raped at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity more than two years earlier.

It described a hidden culture of sexual violence fueled by binge drinking at the college.

Police said they found no evidence of that either.

There were numerous discrepancies between the article, published in November 2014, and what investigators found, said Charlottesville Police Chief Timothy Longo, taking care not to accuse Jackie of lying.

The case is suspended, not closed, and the fact that investigators could not find evidence years later "doesn't mean that something terrible didn't happen to Jackie," Longo said.

He appealed for anyone with information about any sexual violence to immediately alert police, and expressed hope that Jackie may one day feel comfortable explaining what really happened.

"There's a difference between a false allegation and something that happened that may have been different than what was described in that article," Longo said.

Asked if Jackie would be charged with making a false report, he said: "Absolutely not."

Jackie's attorney, Palma Pustilnik, said she would have no comment on the investigation.

Accurate or not, the article heightened scrutiny of campus sexual assaults amid a campaign by President Obama to end them. The University of Virginia already had been on the Department of Education's list of 55 colleges under investigation for their handling of sex assault violations.

Investigators spoke to about 70 people, including friends of the accuser and fraternity members, and spent hundreds of hours on the investigation, Longo said. None provided any evidence supporting the claim of a gang rape at the Phi Kappa Psi house. They gathered ample evidence casting doubt on Jackie's claims, he said.

SWAP FEST

TOM GORDON

With the Cubs in 2001-02, he compiled 27 saves and a 3.39 ERA. After finishing 2002 in Houston, Gordon landed with the Sox in 2003 and saved 12 games in 66 appearances.

KENNY LOFTON

Lofton was best known for his 10 years with Cleveland. However, he also played one year each for both Chicago teams briefly—the White Sox in 2002 and the Cubs in 2003.

RYAN SWEENEY

Yes, Sweeney is a Cubs outfielder three years running, but he was drafted by the Sox in 2003.

NEAL COTTS

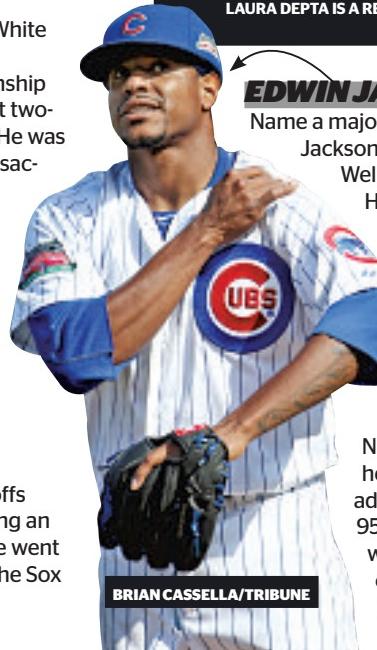

Fun fact: Neal Cotts was the only White Sox relief pitcher to appear in the 2005 American League Championship Series. (The starters pitched all but two-thirds of an inning in five games). He was dealt to the Cubs in 2006 in a transaction that involved David Aardsma.

JAI ME NAVARRO

Oh, Jaime Navarro. While he won 29 games for the Cubs in 1995 and '96 and compiled a respectable 3.62 ERA, he never lived up to the hype when he signed with the Sox as a free agent in 1996.

KOSUKE FUKUDOME

Fukudome got a taste of the playoffs with the Cubs in 2008, even earning an All-Star appearance. From there he went to Cleveland before landing with the Sox for all of 24 games in 2012.

JEFF SAMARDZIJA ISN'T THE ONLY CHICAGO BALLPLAYER TO SWITCH SIDES

By Laura Depta | FOR REDEYE

Spring training is winding down, and it still is bizarre to see Jeff Samardzija in a White Sox uniform. But there have been more than 150 players who suited up for both the Cubs and Sox in their MLB careers. Of course, only one man—Will Ferrell—managed to play for both teams on the same day, a feat that might never be equaled.

Along with Samardzija, here are 10 more North and South siders from recent memory, ranked from least significant in the rivalry to most.

LAURA DEPTA IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @LAURADEPTA

EDWIN JACKSON

Name a major-league club and Jackson likely has played there. Well, eight of them anyway. He compiled a 3.66 ERA in 30 starts with the Sox but struggled with the 2014 Cubs and now is fighting for a spot in the starting rotation.

JUAN PIERRE

Not the biggest guy, but he used his speed to great advantage. Pierre stole 95 bases in two seasons with the Sox and 58 in one year on the North Side. Upon his recent retirement from baseball after the 2013 season, Pierre thanked both organizations via social media.

BOB HOWRY

Bob Howry pitched his first five MLB seasons with the Sox (1998-2002). During that time, he compiled a 3.74 ERA in more than 322 innings of relief to go with 49 saves. He ended up with the Cubs in 2006 and is one of few players to play off action on both sides of town (Sox in 2000, Cubs in 2007).

JEFF SAMARDZIJA

It could be a bit early to have Samardzija so high on the list. However, if his 2014 All-Star season is any indication (2.99 ERA, 202 strikeouts, mostly with the Cubs) he could be the most important arm the Sox have added in a while.

Sammy Sosa

SAMMY SOSA

Some days, the Sox might wish they had not traded Sosa to the Cubs in 1991. Other days, they're probably fine with it. Either way, Sosa's home run binges on the North Side were a blast for all who watched them at the time. How he hit them, of course, is another story.

Fans need luck to see NFL draft

Registration for a chance to win two free tickets to the 2015 NFL draft in Chicago will begin Tuesday and continue through April 5, the league announced Monday.

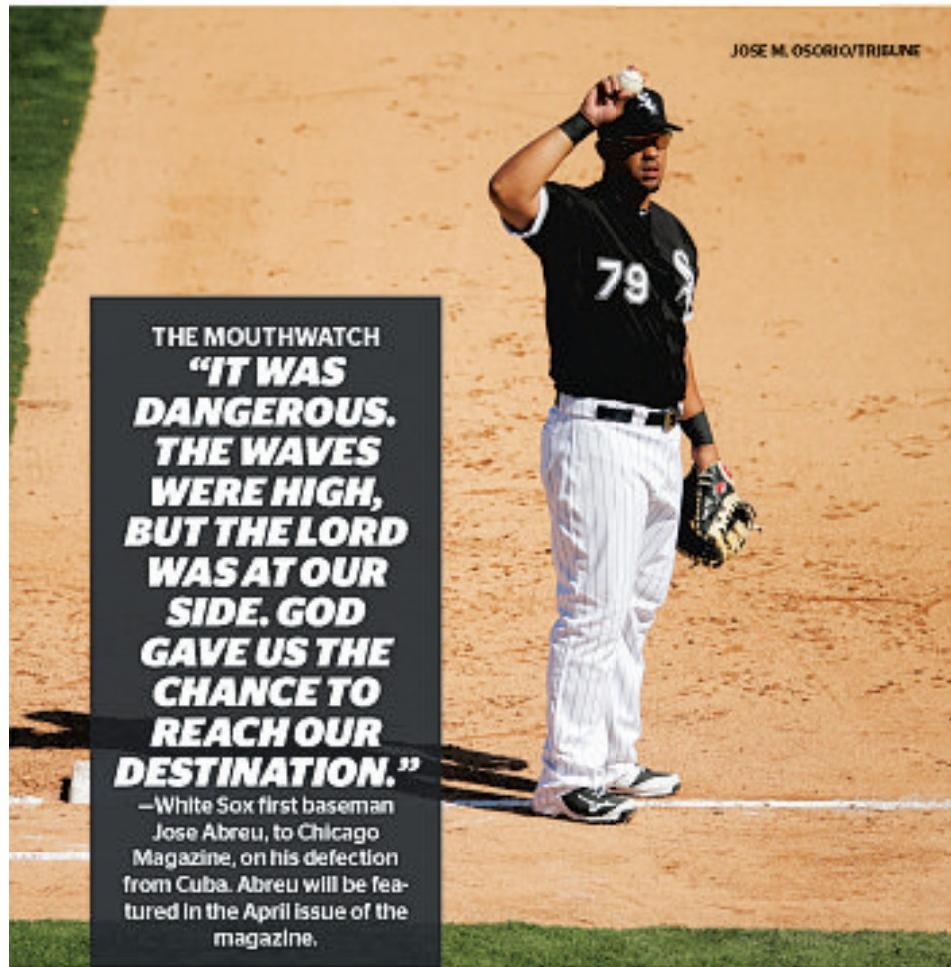

A limited number of tickets are available for both the Auditorium Theatre and "Selection Square" draft events.

The draft runs April 30-May 2 at Roosevelt University, with activities also planned for Grant Park.

Fans can register at nfl.com/drafttown beginning at 11 a.m. Tuesday, and continuing until 10:59 p.m. April 5. Winners will be randomly selected, the league said.

The NFL is implementing the lottery system in Chicago because of the Auditorium Theatre's small capacity relative to its former home at Radio City Music Hall in New York.

SHE'S THE FORGIVING TYPE

Mo'Ne Davis may be a teenager, but she's showing considerable maturity. Joey Casselberry was kicked off the Bloomsburg University baseball team after he sent out an offensive tweet regarding Disney Channel's plans to make a movie about the former Little League pitcher. Davis said Monday on ESPN's "SportsCenter" that she asked the university for Casselberry to be reinstated.

"Everyone makes mistakes. Everyone deserves a second chance," she said. "I know right now he's really hurt and I know how hard he worked to get to where he is right now. I was pretty hurt, but I know he's hurt even more."

ANIMAL INSTINCTS

CHICAGO IS A NATURAL HOME FOR THIS 24-YEAR-OLD TRAVELING TAXIDERMY INSTRUCTOR

By Gwendolyn Purdom | REDEYE

The memory is a little fuzzy, but Mickey Alice Kwapis does recall one unconventional childhood pastime that may have hinted at her future profession. “[My grandfather] had a taxidermied bear in his basement, in his ‘man lounge,’ and I remember I would always take the tongue out of the bear and I would play with it,” Kwapis said. “I would have like a Barbie and this taxidermied tongue.”

Nearly two decades later, Kwapis, now 24, once again spends her time handling stuffed animal parts, only today she does it as a licensed taxidermist and internationally sought-after taxidermy instructor. A frustrated pre-law major at the University of Michigan only three years ago, the new Humboldt Park resident's whirlwind success relocated her in January from Cleveland to Chicago, where she and a fellow artistic science enthusiast are in the process of opening their own lab and teaching studio in the coming months.

Taxidermy had never crossed Kwapis' mind as an occupational option, even when she picked up the hobby after a friend enlisted her help with a mammalogy class project in college.

"I got to her house and she had a dead squirrel on her kitchen table with a bottle of wine," Kwapis said. Having grown up surrounded by animals her mom raised on a farm near their southeastern Michigan home, Kwapis developed a love of nature at a young age—as well as a level of comfort with death and other natural unpleasantries. That night, Kwapis and her classmate created a "study skin," the kind of basic stuffed specimen museums rely on, and soon Kwapis was picking up frozen feeder mice at pet stores to practice on, and incorporating animal bones into jewelry she sold at craft shows. It wasn't until an 11-year-old approached her booth at one Detroit street fair that everything changed.

"This little girl came up and goes, 'Are those real bones?' and I was prepared to be like, 'It's OK, little girl ...' and she was like, 'That's so cool!'" Kwapis said. "And she was like, 'Do you know how to do taxidermy?' and I was like '... yeah, actually I do.' And then she goes, 'Would you teach me?'"

Word of Kwapis' private lessons got out and invitations for her to teach in sold-out classrooms in Cleveland, London, Atlanta, Toronto and Brisbane, Australia, starting pouring in. In the years that followed, Kwapis studied under California taxidermist and popular Internet meme subject Chuck Testa, and has mounted everything from rats and guinea pigs to deer and kangaroos.

"It's just really neat to me to take something that's obviously a lifeless lump of furry meat and make something that looks alive again, and to inspire other people to be interested in that," Kwapis said.

Mickey Alice Kwapis

Kwapis says her classes have drawn hipsters, doctors, stay-at-home moms and Girl Scout troops. Though taxidermy has historically been a male-dominated industry, Kwapis says women typically are the majority in her classrooms. Despite that shift, Kwapis still says her age, gender and appearance often are unexpected, especially when she's teaching abroad.

"I'm usually wearing a dress and I almost always have full makeup and red lipstick," she said. "It's fun to have that juxtaposition because people show up and they imagine some middle-aged man and it's me. It's always nice to surprise people."

She brings her own style to her teaching, too. Practicing what she's coined "sustainable taxidermy," Kwapis encourages students to let nothing go to waste and never to mount animals that were killed specifically for the art. Her methods use pregnancy-safe and child-safe materials, and she's an advocate of giving back to the community she's taking from—while living in Cleveland she was certified to rehab baby animals, and last week she started a volunteer position with The Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum in Lincoln Park.

For Amy Martiny, 28, of Pilsen, Kwapis' well-rounded approach was the biggest draw when she first took a class Kwapis was teaching last spring.

"Generally, it's an interesting topic and she's very willing to go more in-depth than just 'Well, here's how you do it,' and that's it. It's more like, this is each step and this is why it's important, and more about the history of taxidermy and why it's relevant," said Martiny, who works with cadavers being prepped for medical institutions at the Anatomical Gift Association of Illinois. "She's very engaged with it."

Kwapis intends to make this methodology central in the classes she and Martiny plan to offer when they open their Niche Lab this fall. The women are looking to rent a space for hosting taxidermy and anatomy workshops, jewelry-making classes and other events that combine art and science—and introduce students to projects or activities they may have been unfamiliar with or squeamish about in the past. "More often than not people really want to know more and they're like, 'Oh, that's really interesting,'" Martiny said. "They're a little bit grossed out, but actually really interested."

Kwapis says they even plan to lead vegan taxidermy courses, where students embalm leaves and flowers. She and Martiny are hoping for a soft opening this summer.

"I absolutely encourage people to follow

KNOW YOUR STUFF

Federal and state laws differ regarding what animals can be taxidermied or sold. For instance, the sale of any dog or cat fur or skin products is federally prohibited, and using roadkill generally is illegal without a special salvaging permit. As these laws are in place to protect the animals, Kwapis urges anyone interested in trying taxidermy to check with their local fish and wildlife service branch first, and only work with instructors who are licensed. G.P.

their passion or just try something new, because it could end up being life-changing," Kwapis said. "Three years ago, I never thought that I would go from drinking wine and skinning a squirrel to living here and traveling all over the world, but this is where I'm at and you never know what's around the corner."

So far, Kwapis says, Chicago living is working out even better than expected. In addition to finally being in the same city as business partner Martiny, she's also found a boyfriend who's willing to share her quirky passion. For their first Valentine's Day together last month, he bought a pet rat as a gift for Kwapis, cooked her a fancy dinner and the couple taxidermied a squirrel together in her apartment—where the freezer is stocked with Toaster Strudel and frozen rabbits, and Kwapis' grandfather's worn stuffed bear, tongue and all, hangs on the wall.

Father and friend

Vin Diesel (right) found the ultimate way to honor Paul Walker. The "Fast and Furious" actor named his brand-new daughter Pauline after his late friend. "There's no other person that I'm thinking about as I'm cutting this umbilical cord," he said Monday on the "Today" show. "I knew he was there and I felt like, you know, a way to keep his memory a part of my memory, a part of my world." Diesel and girlfriend Paloma Jimenez have three kids together.

HOT DATE

APRIL 18

That's when Robyn is hosting a daylong technology festival in partnership with the Royal Institute of Technology in Sweden, New York Magazine reports. The festival, Tekla, will feature workshops and motivational speakers dedicated to promoting women in technology. Oh, Robyn, you're not a fembot, you do have a heart!

Gunn's Sunday

What's it like spending an evening with Tim Gunn? If it's Sunday, you're going to be watching his stories. "On TV Land they're running a 'Golden Girls' marathon," he told the New York Times. "I'm a huge 'Big Bang Theory' fan. At the People's Choice Awards two years ago, Johnny Galecki was there. I was like, 'Oh, my God, it's Johnny Galecki!' He said, 'Is that Tim Gunn around the corner?' I couldn't believe he knew who I was." Insert every heart emoji here.

THE QUOTE

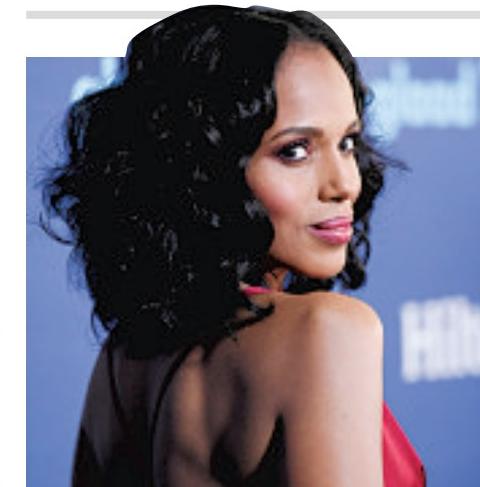

WHENEVER PEOPLE WANT TO TALK ABOUT HOW HARD IT IS TO BE AN ACTOR, I WANT TO GO, 'UM, IT'S HARD TO BE A BABY-HEART SURGEON.' BEING AN ACTOR IS ACTUALLY PRETTY EASY, IF YOU CAN MEMORIZE LINES."

THE DIGIT

The upcoming sixth season of "Downton Abbey" may be the final one for the PBS mega-hit. Deadline.com reports that the show's end is near, according to multiple sources, and Dame Maggie Smith told the Sunday Times recently, "I can't see how it could go on. I mean, I certainly can't keep going. To my knowledge, I must be 110 by now. We're into the late 1920s."

THE QUOTE

IN THE REAL WORLD, BEING AN 'OTHER' IS THE NORM. IN THE REAL WORLD, THE ONLY NORM IS UNIQUENESS, AND OUR MEDIA MUST REFLECT THIS."
